The following article about the tourist industry in Salisbury and focusing on the Hotel Orient is from the book Historic Salisbury Updated by Charles J. Truitt published in 1982. This section is taken from Chapter 20, Taverns, Inns, Victualing Places. The excerpt gives us a glimpse into the travel hub that was late 19th century Salisbury. Salisbury served as a bustling center for travelers from all over the eastern shore and beyond. Many hotels boasted famous and noteworthy patrons. The original Hotel Orient Guest Register Salisbury, MD 1892-1894. G.L. Bradley, Proprietor, donated by the Wicomico Historical Society, is in the local history archival collection of the Nabb Research Center.

As the hub for travel, trade and commerce, Salisbury has been a logical locale for taverns, inns, hotels and “victualing places” for a century and a half. The once well-patronized “public houses” have now vanished but the aura of legendary lore lingers. In this age of the automobile and space ships, public accommodations are fulfilled by modern motor courts which meet demands of today’s faster tempo.

The registers of guests contained names of many notables and celebrities who held center stage on the contemporary scene in their time. Even if the records were available, space would not permit listing them all, but a random selection is illustrative of those who tarried at Salisbury’s public accommodations: President Grover Cleveland, Vice Presidents Thomas R. Marshall, Lyndon B. Johnson, Richard M. Nixon, Spiro Agnew, Gerald Ford, presidential aspirants William Jennings Bryan, Theodor (Bull Moose) Roosevelt, Champ Clark, John F. Kennedy, Five-Star General Omar Bradley, Novelist Sinclair Lewis, Antarctica Explorer Richard E. Byrd, World renown Aviatrix Amelia Earhart, Cinema Stars Loretta Young, Fay Wray, Gary Cooper, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Robert Cummings and his actress wife, world boxing champion Jack Dempsey, radio newscasters Lowell Thomas, J. V. Kaltenborn and Fulton Lewis, Jr. who made their nightly network newscast from Salisbury during their visit here.

The public accommodations offered here became a “second home” for the traveling salesman, or drummer, who customarily used Salisbury as a base from which to call their lower Shore customers. They not only found adequate food and overnight accommodations but in the pre-automobile days they could hire a team and vehicle of their choice from the seventy horses for hire at the Frank Toadvine or James Lowe livery stables on Dock Street or Wimbrow’s stables on Old Water Street. Wholesalers from Baltimore and Philadelphia periodically reserved rooms and laid out their trunks of sample merchandise that merchants from outlying regions might come in, view and place their orders.

Horse-drawn, later motorized, hackneys met every train to transport passengers and their piles of baggage to Salisbury, Central, Peninsula, Merchants, Orient or Byrd’s hostelries. The same Hack service called at the hotels to convey fares to departing trains. Non-commercial travelers arriving from distant parts of the Shore spent the night in Salisbury to await the following day’s train or steamboat, or, if heading home, a stay overnight might be necessary before taking the stage to Princess Anne, Snow Hill or Berlin.

Before paved highways appeared, travel on the narrow winding roads and trails on the Eastern Shore was slow, often arduous and patience-invoking. Distance between homesteads was measured in miles. The venturesome traveler and the horses needed places for food and overnight sleep. This led to so-called "victualing places" in remote areas, which were authorized to make a charge for food and lodging. At one time, in Somerset and Worcester, more than seventy private wayside homes held victualing licenses. Overcharge for such temporary accommodations would subject the owner to a fine upon complaint by the traveler.

At crossroads, a tavern or inn made a business of catering to travelers and in some instances would give its name to the hamlet or village that sprang up there. The town of Berlin is said to have acquired its name from Burley's Inn.

Ann Chaille's Inn was probably the first in Salisbury. Situated on Bridge (Main) Street, townspeople gathered there for public meetings and records also show it was used elections at which public issues were decided by voice vote as was the early custom.

Orient Hotel stood on Old Water Street. After being damaged by the great town fire of 1886, it was restored to a large frame building of contemporary design. Its guest register, discovered some years ago, reveals it hosted the Who's Who of the Lower Shore and became the prestigious hostelry after the county courthouse was erected across the street. A notation in the book reads: "supper, bed and breakfast $1.00."

President Grover Cleveland and party were guests at the Orient November 23, 1893. Accompanying him were Secretary of War B.D. Lamont, Wayne McVeigh, later appointed ambassador to Italy, and Richard Crocker, leader of New York City's Tammany Hall. The president's unannounced appearance here may have coincided with his two weeks hunting and fishing vacation on Hog Island off Virginia's Eastern Shore.

For many years the Orient was operated by George L. Bradlye, then by F.J. Schenck who sold the building in 1903 to George C. Hill. In the next 4 decades it served a variety of purposes: a mortuary, boarding house, a private school attended by such Salisburians as W. Lee Allen, S. Franklin Woodcock and Samuel F. M. Adkins, head-quarters for the gubernatorial campaign of William S. Gordy, Jr., a fruit store and an antique shop known as the "Prancing Horse." The building became the county jail in 1935-1937 when the jail in the courthouse yard was razed to clear space for the new courthouse annex and its penthouse jail. The last owner was H. Lay Phillips who took down the historic building March 25, 1946. Even Water Street has disappeared into a parking lot.
